By CLIFFORD LEON SHERMAN. Copyright, 1916, by John N. Wheeler, Inc.

Tommy never would tire of asking questions in regard to the Mexican border. "What do the soldiers do when it rains?" he demanded. "Of course, if they are in camp and it is too wet for drills, they stay in their tents and look after their belongings. They dig trenches and all sorts of things. And after the rain is over they try to get everything dried out. I came along after a rain one day and saw three soldiers crouched over a mud puddle. When I looked over their shoulders I found that they were playing with a toy."

THE ADVENTURES OF CONSTANCE DUNLAP

BY ARTHUR B. REEVE.

This Week's Story:

"The Embezzlers"

Next Week—"THE GUN RUNNERS."

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I CAME here to hide, to vanish forever from those who know me."

The young man paused a moment to watch the effect of his revelation of himself to Constance Dunlap. There was a certain cynical bitterness in his tone which made her shudder.

"Why—why have you told so much to an absolute stranger?" he asked, watching her face. "Might I not hand you over to the detectives who you say will soon be looking for you?"

"You might," he answered quickly, "but you won't."

There was a note of appeal in his voice as he pursued slowly, not as if seeking protection, but as if hungry for friendship and most of all her friendship. "Mrs. Dunlap, I have heard what the people at the hotel say is your story. I think I understand, as much as a man can. Anyhow, I know that you can understand. I have reached a point where I must tell some one or go insane. It is only a question of time before I shall be caught. We are all caught. Tell me," he asked eagerly, bending down close to her with an almost breathless intensity in his face as though he would read her thoughts, "am I right? The story of you which I have heard since I came here is not the truth, the whole truth. It is only half the truth—is it not?"

Constance felt that this man was dangerously near understanding her, as no one yet had seemed to be. It set her heart beating wildly to know that he did. And yet she was not afraid. Somehow, although she did not betray the answer by a word or a look, she felt that she could trust him.

Through the door of escape from the penalty of her forgeries, which Carlton Dunlap had thrown open for her by the manner of his death, Constance had passed unsuspected. To return to New York, however, had become out of the question. She had plenty of money for her present needs, although she thought it best to say nothing about it lest some one might wonder and stumble on the trail.

She had closed up the little studio apartment, and had gone to a quiet resort in the pines. Here, at least, she thought she might live unobserved until she could plan out the tangled future of her life.

Then came a day when a stranger had registered at the hotel. She had not noticed him especially, but it was not long before she realized that he was nothing but a detective. Had he found out the truth in some uncanny way? She felt sure that the name on the hotel register, Malcolm Dodd, was not his real name.

Constance had not been surprised when the head waiter had seated the young man at her table. No doubt he had maneuvered it so. Nor did she avoid the guarded acquaintance that resulted in the natural course of events.

One afternoon, shortly after his arrival, she encountered him unexpectedly on a walk through the pines. He appeared surprised to meet her, yet she knew intuitively that he had been following her.

There was a certain deference in his manner, too, which did not accord with Constance's ideas of a detective. Yet he did know something of her. How much?

Constance had met him with more frankness as she encountered him often during the days that followed. She had even tried to draw him out to talk of himself.

"I came here," he had said one day when they were passing the spot where he had overtaken her first, "without knowing a soul, not expecting to meet any one I should care for, indeed hoping to meet no one."

Constance had said nothing, but she felt that at last he was going to crash down the barrier of reserve. He continued earnestly, "Somehow or other I have come to enjoy these little walks."

"So have I," she admitted, facing him; "but do you know, sometimes I have thought that Malcolm Dodd is not your real name?"

"Not my real name?" he repeated. "And that you are here for some other purpose than just to rest. You know, you might be a detective."

He had looked at her searchingly. Then, in a burst of confidence, he had replied, "No, my name is not Dodd, as you guessed. But I am not a detective, as you suspected. First, I have been watching you because, even since I heard your story here, I have been—well, not suspicious, but attracted. You seem to me to have faced a great problem. I, too, have come to the parting of the ways. Shall I run or shall I fight?"

He had handed her a card without hesitation. It bore the name, "Murray Dodge, Treasurer, Globe Importing Company."

Ledford, a barber, here September 25. The sentence is the same as a jury gave her husband, John Smith, yesterday. Mrs. Smith, it was charged, walked into a barber shop here September 30 and after severely upbraiding Ledford, shot him. Witnesses said her husband followed her and told her to again shoot Ledford, who was then wounded. She shot again, killing Ledford instantly, according to the testimony. She admitted having been intimate with her victim.

LOCAL ICE COMPANY TO BUILD STORAGE PLANT

Steffen-Brecht to Erect Plant With Capacity of 300,000 Cubic Feet.

Confidence in the future of Oklahoma City has led C. M. Beachy, of Wichita, Kan., president of the Steffen-Brecht Ice & Cream company, and head of the Capital Ice & Storage company, to make arrangements for completing a cold storage department at his local ice plant with a capacity of 300,000 cubic feet—the largest of its kind in the state.

At the same time, owing to the fact that machinery for operating the storage apparatus will necessitate considerable remodeling of the present factory, additional ice-manufacturing machinery will be installed. When in operation with all the new apparatus working, the plant can turn out 150 tons of ice per day. The present capacity for 1000 tons of ice will be provided for 1000 tons of storage capacity.

The present capacity of the local plant is even now in excess of any demand put upon it. During the ice shortage of last summer Tulsa, Bartlesville and other Oklahoma towns drew up the Capital plant for ice.

The new storage plant can be utilized, it was said, to store apples and other perishable fruits in the summer time, not to mention cereals and merchandise subject to insect damage.
